Downside-up thinking?

Re Artistic Controversy Reaches Tipping Point (April 3): Could we turn the Vancouver Park Board commissioners upside-down and keep the topsy-turvy church sculpture?

Joanne Manley, Victoria

» Let's see: The sculpture Device to Root Out Evil is to be removed because it interferes with the view of Coal Harbour. When are the condo towers coming down?

Roger Aveling, Toronto

» Vancouver Park Board vice-chairman Ian Robertson says the sculpture by Dennis Oppenheim, depicting a church perched upside-down, "opens up discussion."

Internationally renowned artists could have extremely lively discussions if they depicted mosques or synagogues upside down. Or what about the Kailasanatha Temple in India: Wouldn't this make for a specially lively discussion among the Hindu population of Vancouver?

These internationally renowned artists always seem to limit themselves to Christian objects to express their artistic visions.

CBC Radio 2 and 'Why?'

We are writing to see if our letter will make Ingrid Whyte (Stop With The CBC-Bashing - letters, April 2) choke on her cereal this morning.

Our overseas visitors have always envied the fact we enjoy CBC Radio 2 with its erudite and engaging hosts and the preponderance of advertisement-free classical music.

We do not have to wait until Labour Day to know what the new programming is going to be like. We are already getting liberal samples of it; more of it will not make us happy.

Why, just for once, can we not leave a really good thing alone?
John and Susan Willson, Vancouver

» Why is it that every time I see the CBC logo these days it reminds me of a hand grenade?

David Bryant, Regina
